Gender and Women in European History: The Enlightenment to the Victorian Eras

This course explores gender relations in Europe from the 18th century about 1870, with an emphasis on the interactions and relations of women, men, and children. Work of various sorts, particularly women’s work (productive and reproductive) will be an important aspect of our study. We will also examine the significant political, socio-cultural and economic consequences of the construction of gender and sexuality in different social classes. The “sites” of our study are mainly France, Germany, and England, but we will at other European nations as well as non-European cases related to gender & colonialism.

How, in various ways, were women and men portrayed, how did they act, and how did they negotiate and/or protest gender boundaries? This era is was a transitional one that experienced major political and economic upheavals (e.g., the French Revolution, industrialization, the Revolutions of 1848, the emergence of “feminism”) and made key contributions to theories and practices of gender and sexuality.

➢ Additional information:

A. You must follow the guidelines set out in UCSD’s Academic Integrity Policy at UCSD. I will pass out a handout related to these guidelines and discuss the issues raised by this policy with regard to our assignments.

B. A handout listing the items that will be placed on “E-Reserves” will be provided by week three; this information will also be on our Web CT. I will also put two copies of the book these “E-Reserves” are from on regular reserves in Geisel Library. The book is: E. Hellerstein et al., eds., Victorian Women: A Documentary Account.
