Course Description
The history of the United States version of capitalism is in part the story of natural resources, stock of capital, and labor, but it is also a narrative of the choices made by capitalists, managers, farmers, workers, financiers, policymakers, and citizens. Sometimes laboring together and at other times at cross-purposes, they worked to promote economic growth and opportunity while at the same time wrestling with what constitutes a “fair” set of economic, political, and social arrangements.

This course will consider United States economic history from colonial times to the early twentieth century. We will track the economic development of the nation from its early decades as a producer of raw materials and a largely agrarian nation to the emergence of the United States as an industrial power in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

Required Readings
*Jeremy Atack and Peter Passell, A New Economic View of American History: From Colonial Time to 1940 (2nd Edition)
*Reader available at University Readers

Optional
Gary M. Walton and Hugh Rockoff, History of the American Economy (10th or 11th edition)

Requirements
There will be two lectures per week. Students are required to write one essay due on the day of the final exam (March 18th) and worth 40% of your course grade. This final essay will be a take-home. You will be given the questions for the final essay in class on March 16th. The final will be cumulative.

Additionally, there will be two required in class exams, each will account for 30% of your course grade. These two exams are not cumulative (i.e. you will only be responsible for the material covered since the last exam). In addressing exam and essay questions, you will be evaluated on your ability to construct an argument that addresses the questions and to draw evidence from assigned readings, lectures, and other material presented over the course of the quarter.
