This course will focus on the development of the Roman army in the context of the evolution of Roman society. The army of any society is a reflection of that society. The Roman army was extraordinary. For nine centuries it was the most effective army in the ancient West. It was defeated in particular battles but in the end the Romans prevailed. The course will try to provide an explanation of this remarkable institution. The history of Rome will provide the necessary background to various changes the army went through. Equipment, tactics, the experience of battle and the effects of military success on Roman society will be discussed. The course will cover developments that led from a citizen militia to a professional army that protected an empire with a 9,000 mile border and a population of between 50-60 millions.
